

10 Ways to Get Involved in Your Child's Education

1. Learn together

Sit with your child during homework and transform something “boring” into a bonding experience.

2. Tweak your attitude

When talking about certain subjects or school in general, try to keep a positive attitude.

3. Read to and with your children

Take turns reading before bed, in the car, during homework -- whenever works best for you.

4. Make everyday activities educational

Reinforce math concepts while baking, learning about science while playing outside, or engineering strong structures out of Lego.

5. Join a parent group

With other parents, you'll have a greater voice in your child's school to affect positive change.

6. Monitor your child's schoolwork

Doing this regularly creates opportunities for you to congratulate, help, and encourage.

7. Keep communicating

Keep open lines of communication between you and your child's teacher to help them better understand their mood or behavior at school.

8. Prioritize parent-teacher conferences

They're one of the best ways to ask questions and raise concerns. Don't forget to take notes!

9. Try supplemental activities

Be mindful of your child's learning style to help ensure that they learn as effectively as possible.

10. Volunteer at your child's school

If you can, let your child's teacher know when you're free and for how long. Then get excited!
